For some people with eczema, the regular use of emollients is all that is needed to keep the condition under control. However, for many people there will be a time when a steroid preparation is required as part of their treatment in order to bring an eczema flare under control.

Topical Steroids : National Eczema Society

Topical steroids are the most commonly recommended treatment for eczema. Yet they only provide temporary relief and are dangerous. Because topical steroids can harm the skin, their use is restricted to less than a week.
